Corona

With this blog post, we want to give people from around the world and from different backgrounds the opportunity to tell their personal stories in times of the Corona pandemic. Today with a post from the USA. Sharon lives in Massachusetts and for her, the pandemic initially came at a moment when "normal" life was too fast and with too many obligations. The lockdown allowed her to turn to things she had neglected for too long, and so she turned to her musical instruments and cooking, among other things. You can listen to her here:

Why this project?

Because the Corona pandemic has now reached all the countries of the world and is impacting the lives of the majority of the world's population, we, two students of Cusanus University, are interested in learning about people in other places of the world beyond what the media has covered. The aim is to enter into a socially relevant dialogue at the interface between academic scholarship and society, and to authentically provide different perspectives. With this goal in mind, we want to ask people from different regions of the world to offer their own interpretations, their own narratives of the current situation. The blog posts are displayed in alphabetical order of regions, countries and cities. Note: The information provided here represents the individual opinions and individual experiences of those persons interviewed.
